WOMEN'S AND GENDER STUDIES CONCENTRATION

Program Overview

The Women's and Gender Studies program spans a wide range of disciplines to offer courses that focus on the analysis of gender as a category. Courses associated with the program pay particular attention to the social construction of gender identity and gender relations and to the intersection of gender with other categories, including race, class, and sexuality. The Women's and Gender Studies program values student engagement with feminist discourses and practices and seeks to help students understand representations and realities of gender in multicultural and global contexts.

All students who complete the Concentration in Women's and Gender Studies engage in either an independent study or an internship, depending on their interests and needs. The Concentration in Women's and Gender Studies is designed to complement majors and career goals in many different fields, including government, non-profit agencies, nongovernmental organizations, education, human resources, social work, counseling, law, medicine, and the arts.

Students who complete a Concentration in Women's and Gender Studies choose from many disciplines to complete their requirements and are encouraged to explore gender through the lens of multiple academic fields. The concentration includes a practicum-either an internship or an independent study-to provide students with professional preparation and opportunities to explore specific interests in greater depth.

Students should work closely with their advisors to select courses that support their personal and professional aspirations and to determine what form of practicum best suits their educational and career objectives.
