LAW 056. POVERTY LAW PRACTICUM. (3 Credits)
The concept of equal justice under the law is such a fundamental ideal in the United States that it is etched above the entrance of our Supreme Court. Yet 92% of low-income Americans do not get enough or any help with their civil legal problems. Often these problems involve critically important issues such as child custody, access to education, and basic necessities like shelter, food, and protection from abuse. In 2021 legal services organizations received 1.9 million requests for help for a civil legal problem. Legal services attorneys have specialized knowledge in legal areas such as public benefits, eviction, and unemployment, and often deploy those skills in fast-paced, high-volume practices across the country. In this intensive, three-credit practicum students will explore substantive poverty law issues and have the opportunity to help actual clients through a collaboration with Iowa Legal Aid. Through reading, classroom instruction and discussion, and courtroom observation, students will explore how poverty impacts access to justice and gain an introduction to several areas of the law commonly practiced at legal services organizations, including housing, consumer, family, and public benefits. Through classroom instruction, simulation, and actual client work, students will gain experience in client interviews, legal writing, and oral advocacy. This class will require students be able to occasionally travel (with a goal of carpooling) to the Polk County Courthouse and the Des Moines Iowa Legal Aid Office, located in downtown Des Moines.

LAW 066. ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE POLICY & GOVERNANCE. (1 Credit)
The goal of this class is to help prepare law students to support clients who want to develop a strategic and practical AI Governance Policy that serves the mission of the particular client organization (whether a for-profit, non-profit, educational, government etc.). Practitioners and Executive-Level leadership will be invited to enhance the experience for students during simulation role-playing exercises. Prioritization, collaboration, and mission-driven critical legal analysis skills will be emphasized. Students may, for example, be asked to prepare an agenda and lead a short meeting with a client or internal stakeholder. Students may be asked to draft a portion of an AI Governance Policy related to a specific issue of high priority to a hypothetical organization. This is a SKILLS class. There is no written exam or paper. However, some factual and legal research will be required to better inform the student's pragmatic analysis of the client's priorities, risks, and opportunities related to AI.

LAW 067. INTERNATIONAL NEGOTIATIONS. (1 Credit)
This course provides students with an experiential, simulation-based introduction to the theory and practice of international negotiations. Students will learn how to prepare for, conduct, and achieve success as government or private lawyers in international negotiations. The course explores the unique cross-border elements in international negotiation such as heightened information asymmetries brought on by differences in culture, language, political, and value systems, as well as the interaction with foreign laws and international treaties. Students will participate in role plays and two simulated negotiations between private parties from different countries. Each student will have an opportunity to lead a negotiation team for at least one negotiating session. Following the conclusion of each negotiation, students will critique the tactics and strategies employed and the outcomes achieved. In addition to in-person exercises, students will have opportunities to negotiate by email and video conference, and to evaluate the pros and cons of each so they understand how to select the most appropriate medium given the parties and circumstances. The course will include a TBD panel discussion with current or former French lawyers engaged in private and governmental cross-border negotiations, giving students enhanced insights into international negotiations.

LAW 162. JUSTICE, LAWYERING, AND LEADERSHIP. (2 Credits)
Justice, Lawyering, and Leadership is a proposed 2-credit-hour course required in the spring semester of the 1L year. This course constitutes a critical step in fulfilling ABA Standards 303(b)(3) and 303(c) by providing frequent and substantial education in the 1L year and ensuring that students share a uniform foundation for future curricular opportunities. It incorporates the Trial Practicum, providing students an opportunity to apply critical frameworks of analysis related to bias and racism in the law and professional identity formation to real-world lawyering scenarios. The class is divided into three units to address (1) professional identity formation, (2) foundational concepts of bias, racism, and cross-cultural lawyering, and (3) client counseling and negotiation, two lawyering skills that are tested on the NextGen Bar exam but not introduced in our present 1L curriculum. The course reinforces a learning environment where students can disagree respectfully and engage across partisan and ideological divides to better understand their role as leaders, creating a more civil and just society.

LAW 203. RACE, LAW AND HISTORY IN IOWA. (3 Credits)
This course examines the Iowa experience in raise and the law from a historical perspective. It is primarily a lecture course, but with as much student participation as possible. The narrative of the course will be largely chronological, beginning with an overview of Native peoples who lived in what is now geographically knows as Iowa and approaching the present time. While the focus is on historical events in Iowa, the course will compare developments in Iowa with those occurring nationally and in other states. The emphasis will be on understanding specific historical events and how these events related to the development of the Iowa legal environment related to race and the law. Events examined include the development of natural law in the enlightenment era, the crafting of state and federal constitutional provisions impacting race, the anti-slavery movement in Iowa, the rise of Jim Crow, the impact of Worlds War I and II on race relations in Iowa, the struggle in the twentieth century over racial discrimination in rural Iowa, in soda fountains, and dance halls, the enactment of Iowa civil rights legislation, the rise of de facto segregation, and other contemporary issues related to racial justice. In covering these topics, the course will consider aspects of the Native, Black, Latinx, Asian, and European experience in Iowa over time. At the conclusion of the class, students will consider lessons that might be learned from the march of history on Iowa civil rights law.

LAW 211. SPORTS LAW. (3 Credits)
Law and lawyers (lawyers in both traditional and non-traditional legal careers) influence the structure and operations of virtually every area of the sport industry, from gambling on sports to college athlete compensation issues to labor relations between professional athletes and leagues and much more. In this course, students will engage in simulation exercises to study legal processes in intercollegiate athletics and professional sports and practice skills that attorneys use in traditional and non-traditional sports law careers. First, students will learn about the Major League Baseball (MLB) salary arbitration process that provides players who do not yet qualify for free agency the opportunity to earn closer to fair market value for their services. For more than 50 years, the process has been an integral part of the MLB collective bargaining agreement negotiated between management and the players union. Sports agents, attorneys and team executives participate in salary arbitration preparation and hearings, and it is a process presided over by panels of lawyer arbitrators. Students will develop oral and written advocacy skills and nontraditional legal research skills while participating in a mock salary arbitration hearing. Students that are motivated to do so will have the opportunity to enter a team in the Tulane University Law School International Baseball Arbitration Competition in mid-January. (Learn more about the competition here: https://law.tulane.edu/academics/sports/baseball-arbitration) Those hearings are judged by baseball agents and executives from teams, the league and the MLB Players Association. The experience offers excellent networking opportunities with the judges. The course will then transition into study of the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) infractions process. The NCAA processes major rules infractions (e.g., recruiting and academic misconduct violations) through a hearing process that is similar to an administrative law proceeding. Students will learn about the NCAA infractions process and develop oral and written advocacy skills and nontraditional legal research skills while participating in a mock infractions hearing. Students that are motivated to do so will have the opportunity to enter a team in the University of Iowa National College Athletics Infractions Hearing Competition in January and February. (Learn more about the competition here: https://law.uiowa.edu/experiential-learning/courtroom-advocacy/college-athletics-infractions-hearing-competition) Those hearings are judged by college sports lawyers and executives with expertise in NCAA regulatory affairs. The experience offers excellent networking opportunities with the judges. List the learning outcomes for the course. E.g. "By the end of this course you will develop and... Upon completing this course, a student should have competency in the following: • Identifying and critically examining legal issues impacting intercollegiate and professional sports. • Understanding of the baseball salary arbitration process and how it is utilized in compensating MLB players. • Understanding of the NCAA infractions process and the entities involved in regulating institutional compliance with NCAA legislation. • Performing non-traditional legal research that supports arguments in a baseball arbitration hearing and an NCAA infractions hearing. • Development and application of oral and written advocacy skills during formal hearings.

LAW 220. MASS INCARCERATION. (1 Credit)
This seminar examines the growth and consequences of detention centers, jails, and prisons in this age of "mass incarceration." Nearly 2.2 million Americans are behind bars (roughly one in every 100 adults). The United States has far more incarcerated people per crime than any industrialized nation. If we include persons on parole or probation, one adult in 23 is under correctional supervision. With taxpayers paying costs in excess of $75 billion each year and with African Americans and Latinos overrepresented in the American justice system, some scholars, advocates, and policy makers argue that mass incarceration represents one of the greatest social injustices of our time. This class is taught during a moment of mass activism and bipartisan support for justice reform. As the movement for reform shifts from protests to politics, it offers pragmatic lessons, ominous premonitions, and promising possibilities. We will examine policy solutions to fix a "justice" system that destroys lives and harms communities,

LAW 258. BAR EXAM PREPARATION. (3 Credits)
The Law School offers the Bar Preparation course every Fall and Spring semester. The class is designed to develop the study habits and test taking skills unique to the bar examination. The course is limited to third-year students in their final semester. This is a hybrid course, largely offered online through video lectures that review substantive law and provides strategies for approaching MBE, MEE, and MPT questions. Students are required to have individual meetings with the instructor to discuss effective methods for memorizing the law, create a study plan and to review their MBE and MEE performance. Students are required to write answers to many practice essay questions and receive feedback. A practice bar examination under exam conditions is given as a midterm and at the end of the semester. Throughout the course, there are live sessions where we provide additional information related to preparing for the bar exam. The course is an elective for most students, but under Student Handbook Rule 9.1.4 students with a CGPA of 2.5 or lower at the end of the Spring semester of their first year and any 3L student with a CGPA of 2.5 or lower upon entering her/his last semester is required to take the course. Students who are required to take the course are required to achieve a passing grade in order to graduate.

LAW 308. AI AND THE LAW. (3 Credits)
This survey course will introduce selected issues at the intersection of Law and Artificial Intelligence ("AI"), which includes machine learning and algorithms, from a non-technical legal perspective. AI technology and applications permeate almost every aspect of daily life at a global level. AI has many potential benefits to society, but also brings many challenges that require a cross-disciplinary approach. AI issues include intellectual property challenges (including authorship questions for copyright and inventorship for patent, as well as potential infringement of copyright, trademark, patent, trade secrets etc.). AI also raises privacy concerns and ethical issues. Use of AI can lead to denial of employment or credit as well as incarceration. Facial recognition can be used by governments to suppress political dissent. Students will be encouraged to explore what concepts of "fairness" and "justice" mean when AI is used, in a wide variety of contexts, not only when legally protected classes are involved AI also consumes massive resources in energy, freshwater, and human labor. To deliver practice-ready exceptional service to clients, students need to think critically about price versus performance for AI technology and about the broader ecosystem and infrastructure for AI. The effects of AI are being experienced daily on a global scale. It is essential that lawyers participate in addressing the challenges of AI and that they bring diverse perspectives to this important effort. Guest speakers from law and other disciplines relevant to AI issues will be invited to present (some may be remote/via Zoom). This is a paper class. There is no Final Exam. Students will be required to write papers on topics of their choice (with prior instructor approval of such topics). Prior instructor written approval is required for any student who would also like to use their paper to meet their AWR requirement.

LAW 309. LAW AND ECONOMICS. (3 Credits)
This course will introduce students to basic principles of economics and how those principles are used to analyze legal questions. Students will learn how legal rules (legislative, regulatory, and judicial) change the incentives faced by individuals and entities. Because the course covers a broad range of legal fields, students will have the ability to apply economic tools to the area of law they are most interested in. This, in turn, will allow them to think deeply about the legal rules in that area and anticipate how clients will need to be advised in order to further client goals and maximize value to the client. Students will facilitate discussion for 1-2 class periods, requiring them to learn the material in much more depth. Student will also write a term paper on a current or future issue arising in their preferred area of law.

LAW 331. CURRENT ISSUES IN FOOD AND AG. (2,3 Credits)
This is an upper-level course that provides an overview of current issues facing the food, agriculture and biofuel industries. The course will focus on both domestic and international issues, including litigation concerns, trade barriers, and developing/current policy issues. These are the key concerns that practicing lawyers, in law firms and in the private sector, are dealing with as they look at current needs and long-term planning of their clients and employers. They are also the same issues that those in the regulatory industry are dealing with on a daily basis. We will look at these issues from the viewpoint of a practitioner, focusing on developing the skills required to deal with a series of substantive issues surrounding litigation and regulation within these industries.

LAW 334. 2ND AMENDMENT:HIST-THEORY. (3 Credits)
Students enrolling in this course should have dual expectations. First, they should be prepared to explore in depth the Second Amendment and the current issue of gun violence. Second, they should be ready to write a scholarly paper related to Second Amendment theory, litigation, and politics. Second Amendment jurisprudence is developing rapidly, in 2008 the Supreme Court's decision in District of Columbia v. Heller, for the first time established an individual right to possess firearms, espcially for self-defense in the home. In June of 2022 the Court decided New York State Rifle & Pistol Association v. Bruen, setting out a new legal test focused on text, history, and tradition. Applying Heller and Bruen, we will consider these questions: Can we regulate certain types of weapons? Can we prohibit certain categories of persons from possessing weapons? Can we prohibit the possession of firearms in certain sensitive spaces? Students must choose a topic related to firearms law, submit a detailed outline, and then a first draft. Professor Carroll will line-edit the draft. Students are expected to respond to the line-edit by editing and revising to improve clarity, precision, and accuracy.

LAW 335. PRIVACY AND CYBERSECURITY LAW. (3 Credits)
Privacy and Cybersecurity Law will take a practical approach to the evolving global, national, state and local-level web of privacy and security laws, regulations, and industry standards. We will explore the scope and nature of control over personal information from perspectives including: individual, corporate, regulatory and law enforcement. We will also touch on recent controversies such as (depending on student interest and the relevance to the organizations selected for the hypothetical simulation exercises) one or more of the following topics: teen and children's data online, health data, facial recognition, deep fakes, encryption, security incident response, domestic surveillance, drones, ad-targeting, virtual reality, geolocation, social networking, revenge porn, haptic security, biometrics, and DNA databases. Through the lens of Privacy and Cybersecurity Law, students in this course will develop and practice creative problem solving, advising and counseling, legal research, and legal drafting skills. Through in-class discussions, team and group drafting exercises, as well as individual work, students may draft one or more emails to a hypothetical organizational client, revise one or more sections of the Privacy Policy posted online for a hypothetical client, and may draft a portion of an Incident Response Plan for a hypothetical client. This will be taught as a SKILLS class. Prior instructor written approval is required for any student who would also like to write an AWR on a topic related to privacy or cybersecurity.

Students enrolled in the Entrepreneurial/Transactional Clinic will provide comprehensive legal services to business startups, entrepreneurs, and community nonprofit organizations to help establish successful ""for profit"" and nonprofit enterprises. The Clinic's target clients include those entrepreneurs and business innovators, who are not able to afford retained legal counsel, and who are located in several underserved Des Moines neighborhoods. An ET Clinic student will interview assigned clients about their specific business ideas and plans. Students will provide advice to the client about choice of entities and then draft the requisite organization documents for the client. Depending on the type of entity selected, the student will create articles of incorporation and bylaws, or LLC certifcates of organization and operating agreements. A student may also evaluate a client's need for the protection of the client's intellectual property. This may trigger trademark or tradename registration with applicable state and federal agencies. Students also may furnish legal representation regarding common issues that confront small business owners, inluding, employment agreements and policies, Sub-S elections, leases, purchase agreements, financing arrangements, buy-sell agreements, and independent contractor agreements. The ET Clinic's general mission is to afford students an opportunity to apply classroom legal doctrines to real life business ventures - and help each student develop basic pracitce skills for common ""deal making"" situations that will confront them as practicing lawyers. LAW 550. FR-CHANGE/DVLPMT EUROPEAN LGL. (1-2 Credits)
In the first part of the course we will look at the major disruption being caused both to the United Kingdom and the European Union by the referendum in June 2016 for the UK to leave the Erupoean Union in 2019 (Brexit). We wlll examine the reasons for this populist vote, and the impact it is having on the hithertofore stable legal and constitutional system of the United Kingdon, and even the threat it poses to the continnued unity of the Kingdon. The second topic to be addressed is that of the legal systems of European countries, which have been subject to pressure to change and converge in the context of the European Union. In this course we will look at how certain issues are developing in the legal systems of Scotland (which is a mixed systerm, based partly on English law traditions, and partly on Continental law tradition) and France. For example, we will compare the written constitution of France with the largely non-written UK Constitution, and will examine the further devolution of legislative power in Scotland in the light of 2014 independence referendum; increasing legislative power in Wales; and the devolution to power to the Conseil Regionaux in France. We will also examine other topical questions in the various justice systems.

LAW 551. FR - EUROPEAN UNION LAW. (1 Credit)
The European Union has become a formidable trading bloc, and the gross national product of the European Union countries will soon rival that of the United States. As international trade increases, it is imperative that U.S. lawyers understand how the community is organized. In this general introductory course, students explore the basic institutions and principles of the European Union as well as its procedures. The course looks also at the political reasons behind the creation of the European Union, and the impact of expansion to the former Soviet bloc countries of Eastern Europe. We will also look at the stresses and strains of recent years, and in particular of EU's reaction to the nationalistic and authoritarian trends in some of the Memeber States.

LAW 560. FR - GLOBAL CYBER LAW. (1 Credit)
Cyber Law addresses the internet's relationship to technological and electronic elements. It encompasses many emerging legal issues that intersect with daily life, including privacy, cybercrime, commercial law, intellectual property, human rights law, social media and free speech. As these topics can be impacted by things like international conflicts, cyber warfare, and economic developments, the course's content will be at the cutting edge of the world's biggest issues. This class is relevant to students interested in nearly every legal discipline. For example: Family law is impacted when a child's Twitter or Snapchat feeds are admitted in court. Securities law is implicated when people donate to international causes online. The increasing presence of hackers and email breaches can impact everything from privacy law to presidential elections. The class will give students the opportunity to consider how the cyber world is increasingly impacting the physical world. There are no prerequisites for the course.
